

Government Relations & Public Policy

A Focus on Results

Van Ness Feldman's policy practice provides substantive, results-oriented advice and representation on federal legislative and regulatory policy in the energy, natural resource, environment, transportation, tax, and health care arenas. We lobby Congress, federal agencies, and the Executive Branch to solve regulatory roadblocks, create favorable federal policies, and secure funding support. We provide Washington representation for clients on policy issues before members of the House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate on Capitol Hill, as well as before agency officials within the Administration.

Industry Knowledge

The most effective government relations advice comes from people who know your business. Our public policy clients include companies, trade associations, coalitions and other groups from broad range of industries, including:

- Agriculture
- Biofuels
- Electric Power Producers
- Financial Institutions
- Fisheries
- Health Care Providers and Suppliers
- Municipalities
- New Energy Technologies and Energy Efficiency
- Ports and Economic Development Authorities
- Transportation Infrastructure and Technologies
- Tourism

Our Unique Approach

Van Ness Feldman was founded by former Congressional and Executive branch staff with a vision - to build a substantive approach to public policy representation in Washington. The idea is simple - provide clients with unmatched knowledge of the issues and hands-on experience with Congress and the Executive Branch. For 30 years, we have applied our knowledge of the political process with a strong focus on legal and policy expertise to some of the most complex public policy issues before the federal government. The lawyers and lobbyists who comprise our bipartisan team have served as senior advisors to Members of Congress, chief counsel to congressional committees, White House staff and Presidential appointees to Federal agencies in both Democratic and Republican Administrations.